Drinks List

Thank you for dining at BiBi.

The name of this restaurant is an incredibly meaningful one. Not least because it is named after the two biggest influences on my cooking - my grandmothers - but also because I can think of no greater stalwarts of generous hospitality than matriarchs across the Indian subcontinent.

What we serve (and how we serve it) is based on memories and stories from a life split across India and England. Much like myself, we are actually neither 'authentically' Indian or English. Instead, we allow our suppliers and partners to lead us with the world's very finest produce, while remaining true to our heritage.

We are truly excited to have you with us, in no small measure, it allows us to do what we love.

British colonial presence in India during the Victorian era played a significant role in shaping a growing drinking culture across the country, bringing a taste for spirits and mixed drinks.

No cocktail better exemplifies this history than the “Gin and Tonic,” developed in India as a way to make quinine (used to treat malaria) more palatable by mixing it with gin and soda water. This eventually became a staple of colonial-era cocktail culture in India.

Which is exactly why we don’t feature one on our list.

Hot Infusion Tea

The popularity of tea across the Indian subcontinent is well documented - which means sourcing the very best examples is a job we entrust only to Henrietta Lovell of the Rare Tea Company. An old friend of Chet's from his time at Mugaritz, Henrietta's choices of the finest, sustainably-produced and fair trade of artisan teas can be found below.

Sikkim 2nd Flush Muscatel Temi Estate, Sikkim, India	6

Difference Coffee

If legends are to be believed, coffee made its way to India by virtue of seven beans smuggled out of Arab-ruled Ethiopia in the 1670s.

Difference Coffee specialise in sourcing the world's most prized beans, from rare and award winning plots. Due to the delicacy of these coffees, we recommend enjoying it pure, as an espresso or americano.
