Drinks List

British colonial presence in India during the Victorian era played a significant role in shaping a growing drinking culture across the country, bringing a taste for spirits and mixed drinks.

No cocktail better exemplifies this history than the “Gin and Tonic,” developed in India as a way to make quinine (used to treat malaria) more palatable by mixing it with gin and soda water. This eventually became a staple of colonial-era cocktail culture in India.

Which is exactly why we don’t feature one on our list.

Hot Infusions & Tea

The popularity of tea across the Indian subcontinent is well documented - sourcing the best examples is a job we entrust only to Henrietta Lovell of the Rare Tea Company, an old friend of Chet's from his time at Mugaritz. Here we offer Henrietta's choices of the finest, sustainably-produced and artisan teas.

Difference Coffee

If legends are to be believed, coffee made its way to India by virtue of seven beans smuggled out of Arab-ruled Ethiopia in the 1670s.

Difference Coffee specialise in sourcing the world's most prized beans, from rare and award winning plots. Due to the delicacy of these coffees, we recommend enjoying it pure, as an espresso or americano.

St Clouds Estate 'Jamaica Blue Mountain', Blue Mountains, Jamaica	8
Hacienda La Esmeralda 'Panama Geisha Washed', Boquete, Panama	14
Daterra Estate 'Brazil Swiss-Water Decaf', Cerrado, Brazil	8

Spirits

A patiala Peg is a generous measure - about the width of your four fingers when your hand is held parallel to a glass - and the best way to finish a meal.

The origins of the moniker lie with Maharaja Bhupinder Singh of Patiala, whose polo team used a rather underhand tactic to ensure their win in a match against the 'Viceroy's Pride'.

You're not likely to find these choices on many other drinks lists. What we choose to list here are often special vintages, small batch releases, or bottles gathered from Chet's travels overseas.
